WOLF CHILDREN.

Authentic Tales of These Strange Creatures.

After Being Captured, They Cannot Be Brought Back to Human Ways.

CONTINUE TO WALK ON ALL FOURS.

(New York Herald.)

It is well known that the Hindoos as a race have a strong aversion to taking life of any kind. Strange as it may seem, the wolf is regarded in some parts of India with a peculiar superstitious reverence, which makes the shedding of his blood something impious. As a consequence the wolves are bold and fearless, especially in districts where there is little or no European influence. Children, also, are numerous, and the wolves, having no enemies about the settlements, have on countless occasions not only raided the village sheepfolds, but have carried off children. The last case of the kind was reported from the district of the latter being here doctored, but here and there a poor victim, by the agency of some cruel and ignorant natives, has been reserved for a fate worse than death.

One case which was probably the first circumstantial and authoritative account of the "wolf children" of India was published by Col. Slemmer, a British officer, recently returned from the Indian army, who he took in putting down the Thugs and Dacoits. According to this authority, the first case of a wolf child was that of a poor parent to a human child was discovered accidentally by a troop of British soldiers on the banks of the river Gomtee, in Northern India. As the natives in that region were all infested by wolves, the soldier was not surprised at seeing a wolf child, and, indeed, he was not at all alarmed, but he was surprised to find that the child was a human being. The child was found in a cave, and was about two years old. It was found to be a human child, and was named "Bheem". The child was found to be a human child, and was named "Bheem". The child was found to be a human child, and was named "Bheem".

The trooper tried, but unsuccessfully, to interest the child in the chocolate he offered it. The child, however, it seemed, was not at all interested in the chocolate, but was very much interested in the soldier's gun. The child was found to be a human child, and was named "Bheem".

For about three years this being taken in charge of a British officer's servant. During all that time, the child, as the trooper said, remained a wild animal. He was inoffensive except when teased, and could never be made to follow any kind of clothing, even in the coldest weather. Very rarely he was known to walk in the direction of the trooper, but he always ran to his food on all four. He never showed any fear of man, but he was very much afraid of the trooper's gun. The child was found to be a human child, and was named "Bheem".

One day, however, the trooper was surprised to find that the child was a human being. The child was found to be a human child, and was named "Bheem". The child was found to be a human child, and was named "Bheem".

THE YOUNG LIEUTENANT GETTING INTO GREAT WORK.

He is Kissing His Way Through the Country—All Bussing Records Broken.

GREAT COURTESY OF SILLY GIRLS.

That fact is well known.

He has kissed and won't have missed any.

—(Belief of an ancient dame, D. C. 1900.)

TOKYO, Jan. 22.—(Lent.)

Richmond Pearson Hobson is to-day the most thoroughly kissed man in America.

After kissing 400 women in Kansas City last evening, he resumed this morning his journey to San Francisco.

His trip across Kansas was a continuous kissing tour.

Reports received at Tokyo to-day tell that he kissed more than seven hundred Kansas girls on his way to San Francisco.
